Cans canned Sainsbury's switches to cardboard cartons in a packaging revolution

A supermarket is to replace some of its cans with cardboard cartons in a green-friendly initiative. The packs, which are made from wood pulp, will help reduce Sainsbury's carbon emissions 1)..... cutting down on transport costs. Since they are two-thirds lighter than metal cans and rectangular rather than round in shape, it is possible to load more onto a single truck.

Manufactured by Tetra Pak, the cartons will be used for Sainsbury's own-brand chopped tomatoes for a test period of two years. The chain expects to be using the new 'Recart' packs for tinned fruit and a host of other products 2)..... the following five years. It will save on recycling costs because, when crushed, they take up one ninth of the space of equivalent cans and jars. Peter Knutsson of Tetra Pak said the packs will use wood from 3)..... certified as sustainable by the Forest Stewardship Council.

Stuart Lendrum, Salisbury's packaging manager, said: "The launch of this type of packaging is another world first, combining the benefits of lighter and recyclable Tetra Pak packaging with the use of Forest Stewardship Council certified material. This will make it more efficient to transport and much easier for customers 4)..... home."

Tetra Pak, which is more usually associated with milk and juice cartons, recently expanded its applications to wine containers. It is conducting trials on an octagonal cardboard container for some of the wines produced by Australian brand "Banrock Station". The full packs are 20% lighter than full bottles in spite of holding 33% more wine.

The switch to Tetra Pak has been helped by the fact that 70% of local councils now have the machines to recycle cartons. Manufacturing giant Heinz has also started transporting some of its products like baked beans and soups in cartons that can be put in microwave ovens. Another firm, Ambrosia, is now selling its vanilla and rice desserts in cartons as well as cans.

The change to cardboard packaging makes business sense for supermarkets as well as manufacturers because 5)..... steel prices have increased the price of metal cans.

Steve Thomas, of industry organisation Canned Food UK, said manufacturers were facing the challenge from new packaging products and changing consumer tastes. "Food in cans is still an important part of our weekly shopping," he said. The annual turnover of the industry is said to be £1.7 billion.
