PANIC ROOMS AND HOME SECURITY

By Ed Monk

There are many things you can do to make your home less attractive to intruders. However, there are times when nothing you do will change whether or not your home will be burgled. It could merely be chance and your home is in the wrong place or it is the wrong night of the week. In moments like these, it often doesn't matter whether anyone is home or not. The burglars are going to take what they want and do not care if anyone is hurt in the process.

In larger homes that have a lot of floor space and many attractions to interest burglars, one safeguard is the installation of what is known as a panic room. These rooms are designed as a safe place in which the family can assemble and be protected from burglars until help arrives. The idea of a panic room – while relatively new to most households – has been common in the homes of the rich and famous for some time. More and more ‘normal’ homes are having these rooms installed and the primary reason is to keep family members safe in a ‘worst-case scenario’.

Unlike the recent movie “Panic Room” starring Jodie Foster, the average home panic room isn't designed to keep out intruders for an unlimited time but just to slow them down and stop them from hurting the family until help can arrive. Telephones are necessary or at least a mobile phone. Most panic rooms are very simple and are not intended to hold a large number of people for more than a short time. They are really big ‘safes’ built inside the home which can hold people (plus some valuable things although their main purpose is protecting life rather than property). For people who are handy or are designing their own homes, a safe room can be integrated in your home if you are ready to give up some space. The average panic room does not cost mountains of money or technical knowledge. You are not creating a castle but a safe place in your home where your family can hide if there is an emergency intrusion.

Plans can be found on the Internet for those who can build a panic room themselves and these should be carefully followed. It is surprising how much protection and security a room like this can give your family. The knowledge that you can be safe in an emergency is often worth the investment.

If you integrate a panic room into your home security plans, then you should also make sure that it has the right essentials. These essentials would be some sort of seats or cushions, water; long-life snacks in case you have to be in the panic room for quite a time, and blankets. Naturally, you should not forget your mobile phone.

If you hear burglars entering the house, try to escape first through a safe and hidden exit. If escape is not possible, your panic room should be an alternative and safe choice for the family. When there, make sure that you call the police immediately as they will do more to scare away the burglars or limit the amount of time they want to spend in your home. Remember to try to keep calm despite the urge to panic. If you do this, you are more likely to get through the moment safely and, more importantly, to keep your family safe.

Gang's plan to dig for cash goes wrong

A plan to tunnel under a shopping centre car park and dig up into an ATM* above came to an end after builders accidentally broke into the secret tunnel. The would-be thieves were only four-and-a-half metres from the ATM outside a DVD store in Manchester when the roof of the tunnel collapsed as electric cables were being repaired in the car park 1) Astonished construction workers descended into a tunnel leading 12 metres to a hidden entrance in the side of a railway line. Bright electric lights 2) installed down the tunnel previously together with supports made from wooden poles.

Greater Manchester police said the tunnel must have taken weeks to construct, with big rocks as well as heavy earth to be removed along its route. The work was done so secretly that it was a mystery how the gang removed tons of earth without anyone 3) it.

No one was in the tunnel when the roof collapsed, but shovels were found next to a wheelbarrow. A spokesman for Great Manchester police said the area had been closed and the tunnel filled with soil and concrete after a search for clues. "Investigation showed the full length and height of the tunnel and officers are now investigating the attempted burglary," he said.

Most of the tunnel ran under a car park with a serious risk of collapse from the heavy asphalt surface and heavy trucks 4) on it. Tunnelling work was clearly taking place as a line of bags of soil was also found near the end of the tunnel. 5) have now been used to fill in the gang's handiwork.

One of the workmen who found the tunnel said: "We didn't know what it was at first, so I went down to have a look. It extended about 20 metres from the railway, then changed direction 6) the ATM outside the Blockbuster DVD store. The burglars were almost there. I wasn't worried about it collapsing while I was in the tunnel because they had made a really good job of it and even the police who came to see it 7) impressed with the workmanship." Mick Duffy from Stainforth Construction Co. Ltd. said that his fellow workers were impressed by their discovery. "It would appear somebody was tunnelling from outside the shopping centre in the direction of the cash machine*. It's very 8) constructed, a semi-professional job with lighting, a fresh air supply, and very well supported and lined."

* ATM (automated teller machine) = Bancomat
