READING COMPREHENSION

TASK 1

You are going to read an article about California governor Arnold Schwarzenegger's plans to replace traditional school textbooks with Internet-based learning aids. For questions 1 - 14, choose from the people (A - F). The people may be chosen more than once. When more than one answer is required, these may be given in any order.

Which person (A – F) says that ...

not all students could afford online learning?	1
a major advantage of books is that they are portable?	2 3
students will get distracted from their studies when online?	4
sending SMS messages should not be regarded as proper writing?	5
electronic learning aids could potentially be very attractive?	6
there are problems of security and unreliability with Internet learning?	7 8
the environmental gains of internet-based learning are questionable?	9
the truth of material in books can be checked easily?	10
one day school textbooks might disappear?	11
handling a book is a pleasurable experience?	12
he/she has recent first-hand experience of Internet-based learning?	13
traditional school textbooks are often badly treated?	14

14 POINTS

Should traditional school textbooks make way for the Internet?

California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger has announced plans to slowly replace school textbooks with Internet learning aids. Is this a good idea?

A Staring into computers for every subject from a young age will affect students' eyesight. Looking at text or images through a glass screen is not the same as having the original in front of you. Hours spent sitting in one position will also be bad for young people's posture. In addition, students will inevitably be tempted to click onto sites unrelated to their studies. Without textbooks students may also have more difficulty finding and revising work already done.

B I think it's a good idea in a way as quite a few kids often forget their textbooks, scribble all over them and generally don't look after them. It will definitely save trees, but don't forget that it'll increase the demand for electricity and thus increase CO_2 emissions, so let's not get too excited about the ecological benefits, unless the schools have solar panels installed, which is unlikely on a large scale in the foreseeable future.

C I think that the students in California might miss that 'something special' that comes from holding a book in your hands. We also need to keep the art of handwriting going - too many young people today have poor penmanship, poor grammar and think 'texting' is literature! Then there is also no guarantee that a site won't be hacked and the lessons that a teacher has carefully prepared and which the students need to work through destroyed.

D One cannot overstate the stupidity of this idea! Web pages are expensive to produce, ephemeral, and require access to an expensive, energy-consuming, fragile, and cumbersome screen that can only be read in the shade. Books are cheap, robust, can be read anywhere, easily transportable, excellent quality and, most important, have fixed, verifiable content. Schwarzenegger's idea will put California back in the Dark Ages!

E When e-books become as flexible and handy as conventional paper books, phasing out textbooks may make sense. In time I envisage e-books that look like paper books, but where you at present have one text per book you would potentially have thousands. The data on the page could change. You could upload audio-visual material, so that you could have video presentations on a page. You could change the font size (useful for the elderly or partially sighted) or the language. Traditional paper books will hopefully not die out, but they do need to become more interesting, and have more information, otherwise future generations of e-books will undoubtedly replace them.

F It's a terrible idea. I have just completed a university degree where I had to do a great deal of online studying and it was awful. The internet is unstable - it is common for web pages or even whole sites to be down for days. A book's content, by contrast, is available at all times, not least because you can easily carry a book around with you. Also, Schwarzenegger is out of touch with the real world – maybe he has been too rich for too long - how do the poor kids (and there are a lot of them) buy computers or access the internet? There are, yes even in California, families that don't even have a landline telephone.

You are going to read an article about a man who has a children's dream job. Eight sentences have been removed from the article. Choose from the sentences A-I the one which fits each gap (15-22). There is one extra sentence which does not belong in the article.

I get my kicks from plastic bricks

Guy Bagley has single-handedly designed and built some of the most famous buildings in the world - including a large part of London - down to the very last brick.

But the 37-year-old builder didn't have to mix sand and cement because his architectural creations are built entirely out of Lego. Guy is the chief model maker at one of Britain's most popular theme parks, Legoland. He is paid to construct the thousands of sculptures at the park. 15.....

Actually, when Guy was a little boy he had the more common dream of being a train driver. "I had Lego as a child and certainly enjoyed playing with it, but I never thought I would be doing this for a living," he laughs.

Guy heads a 12-strong team which spends its days maintaining as well as designing and building models.

16..... They start their working day at 7am, before the park opens its gates, ensuring that existing models are safe for visitors. They then spend time coming up with new ideas for attractions, designing them and making them a colourful reality.

There are almost 55 million Lego pieces currently in use at the park. 17..... In theory, therefore, anyone could reproduce any of his models. He particularly enthuses about the merits of the classic eight-stud brick because, he says, "no matter what you build, it is used".

The team is kept busy because the park is always evolving, with the large London section regularly updated to reflect current events in the capital. 18.....

For Guy, the greatest job satisfaction comes when he reveals his creations to the public for the first time. "When you build a model and bolt it down and see guests admiring it, that's a high," he says. 19...... For Guy, it's what most of us avoid by working in a warm office - the weather. The cold and a rain make things less pleasant, he says.

So how did Guy get the job at Legoland? When he was working as an architectural model maker (his previous job), the firm he was employed by was invited to create a model for the then new Legoland. Legoland's bosses, who were keen to employ their own model makers, were impressed with Guy's work and invited him to apply for a job with them. As part of the selection process, Guy was given a box of plastic bricks and an hour to build either an animal or a building from scratch. 21.....

Guy advises would-be professional model builders to keep a portfolio of their work, including the designs and photographs of their best creations. But, most of all, they should "keep the childlike passion".

However, any of those wanting to jump into Guy's shoes any time soon may face a long wait. After over 16 years in the job, he declares he will not give it up without a fight. 22.....

- A All are the standard bricks that can be bought at any toy shop.
- B "I wouldn't change it for all the tea in China!"
- C His parrot succeeded in convincing Legoland's bosses.
- D Could any young boy think of a dream job to top that?
- E Mini runners are added, for instance, when the London marathon is taking place.
- F "It's been a wonderful job, but it's time for me to move on."
- G They range from six-piece birds to a Boeing 747 made out of 2.2 million bricks.
- H "It was very much a case of being in the right place at the right time," he says.
- I But even dream jobs have a downside.
